

Dear Mrs. Burton,

The Easter lilies came yesterday, white, radiant, fragrant with a message of hope that cheered me. I was grieving over the fearful world-tragedy that fills all thinking minds and good hearts with woe. But your kindness touched my sorrow like a sunbeam, and I found it easier to believe in the message of Easter-- the wondrous renewal and uplifting of humanity. I thank you warmly for the lilies, and for the sweet thoughts they are giving me.

With cordial Easter greetings, I am,

Sincerely yours,

Helen Keller

Montgomery, Alabama,

April eighth.