Laws Relating to Newspaper Subscriptions and Arrears.
In response to a request, we give the law as it stands relating to newspapers and subscribers:
1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscription.
2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their periodicals, the publishers may continue to send them until all arrears are paid.
3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their periodicals from the office to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bills and ordered them discontinued.
4. If subscribers move to other places without informing the publishers, and the papers are sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.
5. The Courts have decided that "refusing to take periodicals from the office, or removing and leaving them uncollected for, is prima facie evidence of intention to defraud."
6. Any person who receives a newspaper and makes use of it, whether he has ordered it or not, is held in law to be a subscriber.
7. If subscribers are in arrears, they are bound to give notice to the publisher, at the end of their time, if they do not wish to continue taking it, otherwise the publisher is authorized to send it on, and the subscriber will be responsible until an express notice, with payment of all arrears, is sent to the publisher.

STATE OF ALABAMA—BULLOCK COUNTY.
In Probate Court—
Special Term, January 8th, 1874.
Susan J. Baskin, deceased, Estate of.
This day came W. J. Lewis, Adm'r de bono non of said estate, and filed his application in due form and under oath, praying for an order of sale on certain lands described therein and belonging to said estate, for the purpose of paying debts, upon the ground that the personal property is insufficient therefor.
It is ordered by the court, that the 23d day of February, 1874, be appointed a day for hearing such application, at which time all persons interested can appear and contest the same, if they think proper.
W. H. BLACK, Probate Judge.

ADMINISTRATOR'S NOTICE.
NOTICE is hereby given, That Letters of Administration have been granted to the undersigned by the Hon. W. H. Black, Judge of the Probate Court of Bullock county, on the 28th day of November, 1873, on all and singular the goods and chattels, rights and credits of the late and deceased, against the estate of said deceased, are required to present the same within the time prescribed by law, or they will be barred. Persons indebted to the estate will make payment to the undersigned.

RANDOM RECOLLECTIONS OF THE ALABAMA LEGISLATURE, 1857-8, 1859-60.

BY S. S. SCOTT.

No. 4.

Some important measure was before the House, the object of which met the approbation of the members generally. There was opposition, however, to some of the details of the bill, and a motion was made to refer it to the proper committee, that these defects might be remedied. The friends of the measure undertook to suspend the rules, and pass it at once, and just as it was. When the effort was made, a new member suddenly arose, the silver tones of whose voice immediately riveted attention, and said: "I approve of the object sought to be attained by this bill; but I do think certain of its provisions ought to be modified. The usual reference to a committee, that this end may be accomplished, is asked by the few who agree with me. The majority are disposed to deny us this right, and are striving to put this measure through with a haste which smacks of indecency. Now, sir," exclaimed he in a voice as clear and as ringing as a trumpet-call, "we demand this reference; and we hereby warn the majority that if they attempt thus to 'drag' us into measures, to ride over us 'booted and spurred' we will exhaust every constitutional right, and every parliamentary manoeuvre, to defeat the bill." He thereupon proceeded to make a speech against certain features of the bill, which for eloquence and power was seldom surpassed in a legislative assembly. This was the first speech made by James B. Martin, of Talladega, before the Alabama Legislature.

Col. Martin was killed at Dranesville, Virginia, in the thirty-sixth year of his age. He was an humble christian, an affectionate friend, an honest man, an able lawyer, and a true soldier. With him, as with his great commander, duty was a guiding star—one that was never lost sight of—and in the shining but rugged path marked out by it, he was never known to falter or waver. The truth of this statement was made conspicuously manifest in the last act of his life. He had been elected Judge of the District in which he resided, and had obtained leave of absence from the army to hold his courts. He postponed his departure to take part with his regiment in the expected engagement. It is said that the shadows of coming death rested upon his spirit, and that to a comrade, who found him upon his knees before the battle began, he expressed the settled conviction that the last day of his life had dawned; and he was prepared for it. The death that he looked for found him where duty placed him.

"On path of greenward
Winds round by sparry grot and gay pavilion;
There is no flint to gall thy tender foot,
There's ready shelter from each breeze or shower.
But duty guides not that way—see her stand,
With wand entwined with amaranth, near yon cliff;
Oft, where she leads, thy blood must mark thy foot-steps;
Oft, where she leads, thy head must bear the storm,
And thy shrunken form endure heat, cold, and hunger;
But she will guide thee up to noble heights,
Which he who gains seems to native of the sky,
While earthly things lie stretched beneath his feet,
Diminished, shrunken, and valueless."

These are noble lines. Would that the truths garnered in them could find the same lodgment in the breasts of all young men that they found in that of the subject of this sketch. The tender and graceful stanza so often quoted, is so singularly appropriate when applied to Colonel Martin, that I cannot refrain from using it here in the way of a farewell.

"Ah! soldier, to your honored rest,
Your truth and valor bearing;
The bravest are the tenderest,
The loving are the darest."
The Nice Member.

One of the members of the House, a tall and slender gentleman, always clad in habiliments scrupulously exact and elegant, and guileless of wrinkles, had, in walking, unconsciously perhaps, a sort of Arlingtonian strut. The Colonel—let him have that title for the nonce—was a fine make-up for a joker; and, of course, when this is the case, the joker is always close by. In this instance he appeared in the person of a certain candidate for office before the Legislature. His complexion was adust, his features saturnine, his voice dry, and his deportment, when not engaged in a frolic, grave. With nothing of the apollonian, he was a fellow of infinite jest. To trum up a story on some friend, so arranged as to give it the requisite varietal balance, and made out of all that ridiculous stuff, which, as Macaulay has somewhere said, if founded in fact, the man to whom it refers would desire forever buried out of sight, and the publicity of which would tend to make him hang himself, was his daily business, and to retail it to a choice knot of congenial and appreciative spirits, with the party to be victimized present, the name of his earthly felicity.

But to the tale upon the Colonel: Seizing his opportunity, when the crowd, and "all things else were conforming," the joker remarked that he chanced to be a witness of a somewhat extraordinary incident which he wished then and there to give all the benefit of. A bluff old countryman, a sort of rougher looking Dandie Dinmont, clothed in kersey, and booted in cowhide to his knees, with a huge leather-bound wagon whip under his arm, was standing the day before at one of the corners of Maine street, when the Colonel passed by on his way to the Capitol. The old fellow watched him closely, and with great apparent interest, as he (the Colonel I mean) paced deliberately and majestically along. Stranger and stranger became this gaze—deeper and deeper became this seeming interest, as the elegant and high-headed figure slowly receded; when, all at once, Dandie drew himself up quickly, gave with his whip a pretty sharp crack, evincing of some sudden and desperate resolution, and set off with rapid and lengthy strides up the street. He soon overhauled the gentleman, and brought him to a stand by touching him smartly on the shoulder.

"What can I do for you, Sir?" said the Colonel, turning around, and slightly unfastening.
"Can I stay all night in Montgomery?" was the questioning reply.
"Certainly, if you wish," said the astonished Colonel, rather blandly; but immediately after, as the impudence of the question flashed across his mind, he energetically blurted out, "what in the deuce do you mean, sir?"

"No harm, stranger—no harm intended, I assure you," answered Dandie, mildly and simply. "I have never been here before, and—and—I thought from the way you walked, the place belonged to you."

No. 5.
Among the talking members of the House, Henry T. Drummond, of Mobile, occupied a prominent place. He talked vastly too much, and now and then certain members grew restive under the infection. On one occasion, during about Drummond's third speech upon some matter of no especial moment, the member from P. shot a paper pellet at his nose, which was a very prominent one. Swiftly and surely across the entire hall flew the little missile, and fairly and truly it drew the very centre of the object at which it was aimed. D. is highly indignant, called the sportsman to order. The proper explanation was at once made, and all was quiet again, doubly quiet, for the pellet effectually demolished D's speech.

The member from M., who was talking to P., when he fired the shot, repeated in an under tone, as D. took his seat:

"The first bird of spring
Attempted to sing,
But before he had rounded his note,
He fell from the tree,
A dead bird was he,
The music had froze in his throat."

Poor, gallant, generous, high-hearted and unpopular Drummond! It has seldom happened that a man so deserving had been blessed with fewer friends. Independent, chivalrous, talented, liberal and truly honorable, as he was, it would appear to most persons that he ought to have counted his friends by scores and hundreds; but he was unfortunately afflicted with a temper quick and fiery, and with a manner indifferent and unattractive. Those who understood him thoroughly, and those only, liked him, and, in spite of his (call them not faults, but misfortunes), admired him.

He served through the war, but unfortunately was made to fill a bloody grave after its close. Had he lived, his too ardent spirit would no doubt have been softened down by age, and his many noble qualities would thereby have been allowed ample scope to achieve that greatness which is never thrust upon the unpopular.

The Rough Diamond.

Not it would be a mistake, but little short of a crime, to pass him by without some notice here. To do so would involve a course not less radically defective, to quote something eminently rare and new, than the representation of Hamlet with the Prince of Denmark left out. He was a prominent figure among those legislative characters. The Lord of the Highlands "oke was he"—the proud bird of the mountain whose plume was never torn!

He was about forty-five years of age, rather rotund in person, with dark hair and eyes, and a face ruddy and good humored. With but little information and less education, he was always listened to with pleasure by the House, because of the impudence, superlatively snubbing, with which he was abundantly gifted, and which never failed to show itself in every portion of his remarks upon any subject. His character was a perfect jumble of inconsistencies and contraries. He was simple-minded and vain, genial and shrewd, honest and demagogic.

His speeches upon a measure were sometimes, indeed generally, made in supreme disregard of time, place and circumstance. Anything that was suggested to him came out, whether in point or out of point. In remarks upon a rail road bill, for instance, no one was surprised when he left the subject and stretched out thusly:

"My county, sir, is a great county. It is a land of rugged rocks and sturdy trees, and equally rugged and sturdy men. There is nothing within its limits to produce luxurious desires, or begot effeminate tastes. All live by the sweat of their brows. Like them, I have been a hard worker since my boyhood. I am almost without education, what little I know has been accidentally picked up here and there. What I am, I owe to no man. Upward, slowly, but steadily, I have worked my own way. Solitary and alone, sir, I set this ball in motion. Thanks to strong hands and legs and back, and, although I say it myself, perhaps ought not to do so—a cool head, I am now here among the magnates of Alabama."

He was interrupted here by some one rising and suggesting to the chair the irrelevancy of such remarks to the matter under consideration.

"Well, sir, I am opposed to this rail road scheme. Its friends are making a great noise over it, and show no consideration whatever to the feelings of those who do not agree with them. They are like the Pharisee of old, who thanked God he was not as other men. This vaunting, domineering spirit won't serve their turn. They will accomplish nothing by it. 'Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall.' It is the great root of all vices. It hurled Lucifer from Heaven. It drove Adam from Paradise. It set to work the Babel-builders, and brought about the confusion of tongues—an evilness of the great misfortune of which, is to be seen in the remarks of some of the gentlemen upon this floor, whose scraps of Latin, French and other outlandish gibberish, render them at times wholly unintelligible to plain, unlettered men like myself."

He was again interrupted by a member submitting that pride had nothing to do with railroads.

"Yes," the gentleman's proud stomach couldn't stand the wholesome light of the physic. He is one of those fancy members, to whom I have just alluded—one who so words his remarks as to make it dark to me, and to such as I am. And he does the same with some of his bills. Their sense is lost in words—words—These are the grasses concealing, perhaps, dangerous things; but I look closely and sharply; and whenever I see a snake there, I knock it on the head, sir—I knock it on the head. But I will return to the subject as the gentleman desires. I should oppose this bill solely for the reasons given (he had forgotten to give any); but, sir, my principal ground of objection to it, is, that the proposed railroad is not to run through my county."

If he opposed a tax bill, it was because he objected not only to certain features of the measure, but because his people did not like to pay taxes—no more did he. Unfortunately these imperfect specimens furnish but faint traces of that simplicity, geniality and harmless vanity, which gave point to all he did, and perhaps still more forcibly display that singular—that unique trait, which, while it made him, like the demagogue, do certain things for popularity with his constituents, would not allow him, like the demagogue, to conceal the motive.

If living his country has in him a most valuable and trustworthy citizen; if dead, it has lost one—and so has the State.

Advertising in Dull Times.

The Milwaukee "Wisconsin" relates the following:
After the crash of '57, when every body was almost scared to death and the croakers predicted that the country had gone to smash, a dry goods house was opened in this city, which proceeded on the principle that in order to reach the hoarded money in the pockets of the people, the proprietors must sell at very reasonable prices and advertise very largely. They worked vigorously upon this principle. Their brother merchants who did not advertise, predicted that the new comers would be ruined, they paid too much for advertising. Nevertheless, they persisted. In a single year, they paid five hundred dollars in gold to the "Daily Wisconsin" for advertising, and at the end of seven years, they retired from business with a fortune of one hundred thousand dollars, while other merchants on the same street, some of them opposite their store, had failed.

We remember a similar instance, continues the "Wisconsin," among our advertisers in 1857. A merchant continued his advertisement in our columns throughout the whole period of stagnation, and notwithstanding many predictions that "it wouldn't pay," his testimony afterwards was, that his sales were steady and his profits satisfactory, while many a merchant around him who couldn't afford to advertise saw his clerks stand idle behind the counters.

A financial panic does not mean that no one has any money. There is plenty of money in the country, and those that heard it are just the ones to be eager for the "bargains" which a fall in prices holds out. But to buy, they must know where to buy, and the merchant who sells them will receive their cash.

"The Ass in the Lion's Skin."

"An Ass finding the skin of a Lion, put it on, and going into the woods and pastures, threw all the flocks and herds into a terrible consternation. At last, meeting his owner, he would have frightened him also, but the good man seeing his long ears stick out, presently knew him, and with a good cudgel made him sensible that notwithstanding his being dressed in a Lion's skin, he was no more than an ass."

In reading the foregoing fable, I am forcibly reminded of an incident that occurred in my boyhood.

On a certain occasion, while the writer was a member of college, and during a lecture that was being made by Prof. Ryan, a phrenologist, a number of the pupils came to the door of the lecture room, and by stamping, hissing, and talking in a loud tone, made so great a noise as to render it difficult for the more quiet and orderly part of the audience to understand what was being said by the lecturer. Prof. Clark, of the College, seeing how obnoxious the boys were rendering themselves, and knowing how contemptible they must appear in the eye of the Phrenologist, a stranger to all of us, walked to the door and said: "Young men, you need not stick out your ears; we know that you are asses." Ever since that time, when I see persons acting in an unbecoming manner towards others, I think of the reproof administered by Prof. Clark to his disorderly pupils. When I hear one boasting of knowledge he does not possess, or arrogating to himself a degree of perfection to which he is not entitled, I am reminded of "the ass in the lion's skin." It is a fact palpable to all observing persons that there are a great many men who, "by assuming a character to which they are not equal," stick out their ears and thereby show to the world what they are.

UNCLE MAC.

HOW WE ARE CHANGED.

Little Daughter—"I wish the rivers would rise."
Father—"Why, what have you to do with the river's rising?"
"A great deal, father; for then the boats will run."
"And what have you to do with the boats running, my child, eh?"
"They would bring the cotton down, father."
Father—(Looking over spectacles)—"And what have you to do, darling, with cotton bales?"
"Why, if the cotton was down you will be able to sell it, you know, dear father," smilingly.
"And what then?"
"You would have plenty of money?"
"Well?"
Daughter—(Laying her hand on his shoulder, and looking up in his face)—"Then you could pay mother that $20 gold piece you borrowed from her, you know, father."
"And what then, child?"
"Then mother could pay Aunt Sarah the $10 she owes her."

"Aye, indeed; and what then?"
"And Aunt Sarah would pay Sister Jane the $1 she promised to give her New Years, but didn't have any cotton—any money, I mean, father."
"Well, and what else?" (He lays down the newspaper and looks at her cautiously, with a half smile.)

"Sister Jane would pay Brother John fifty cents back, and he said when he got it he would give me the half dime he owes me, and two dimes to buy marbles; and this is what I want the river to rise for, and the big boats to run! And I owe nurse the other dime, and I must pay my debts!"

Pa looked at ma. "There it is," he said. "We are all, big and little, like a row of bricks. Touch one, and away we all go, even down to our little Carrie here. She has, as a child, as great an interest in the rise of the river as I have. We are all, old and young, waiting for money to buy marbles."

A good lesson for debtor and creditor, too, and well enforced.

Traversable old party—"Conductor, why didn't you wake me as I asked you? Here I am miles beyond my station!"
Conductor—"I did try, sir; but all I could get out of you was: All right, Maria; get the children their breakfast, and I'll be down in a minute."

A genius was explaining the utility of an India rubber ship which he was inventing, when an old salt exclaimed: "No, no; it will never do. An India rubber ship would rub out all the lines of latitude and longitude, to say nothing of the equator."

TESTIMONIALS.
Enon, Bullock Co., Ala., Jan. 16, 1873.
Dr. E. C. Hood, Columbus, Ga.—Dear
Sir:—We take pleasure in saying that,
after selling your Bureka Liver Medicine for three years, we have not found a single party but what prefer it to any other similar preparation before it to any public. It is certainly what it purports to be, the best Liver Medicine we know.
BANKS, CALDWELL & Co.
Columbus, Ga., Jan. 22, 1872.
This is to certify that I am using Dr.
Hood's Bureka Liver Medicine in my family, with entire satisfaction, and I believe it to be superior to any other.
Geo. A. PRADY.
Lumpkin, Ga., June 10, 1872.
Dr. Hood:—Up to two months ago I was greatly troubled about every month with bilious attacks, and found nothing that acted like the Bureka, although I had taken Simmons' Regulator, Vinegar Bitters, and others. I now have no trouble with biliousness, and unhesitatingly say that the Bureka is the best
Liver Medicine in the world.
