The Last Good-Bye.

BY SADIE BEATTY.

How dark the shadows grow, darling,

All faintly comes my breath,

Alas, I cannot feel and know

The mystery of death.

In vain you strive to hold me here,

To keep me ever near,

The wings of Aerial love bear

And we must say good-bye.

But this is not the first, darling,

We've said good-bye before,

And tears of sorrow seemed to burst,

Up from the full heart's core;

Yet still we hope to meet again,

Renew each earthly tie,

Dear love, it is not now as then,

This is the last good-bye.

It is a sacred word, darling,

All other words above,

And from our lips it never was heard,

Save by the ones we love;

Adieu will serve this world of show,

For soon their tears they dry,

'Tis only when the dear one's gone

We curse to say good-bye.

We're drifting far apart, darling,

And when we meet again,

'Twill be to join with tongue and heart

The angel's glad amen.

The start of peace beams from the shore,

Where I am dreaming night;

Then darling, kiss me just once more,

And take the last good-bye!

Gen. Johnston on the War

We clip the following notice of General Johnston's Narrative of Military Operations from the Louisville Courier-Journal. We understand the work will be ready for delivery in a few days.

"We have been favored with an interesting review of Gen. Joseph E. Johnston's contribution to the history of the war between the States, furnished by the New York World from advanced sheets or the work. It is unnecessary to say that the extracts from Gen. Johnston's story are interesting. No man in the Confederate States is more competent to do what Gen. Johnston has undertaken than himself. Mr. Stephens, in his unanswerable and imperishable work, has exhausted the discussion of the constitutional and moral questions involved. Gen. Johnston enters a different field. He gives the details of military operations. He deals only with events, while Mr. Stephens dealt chiefly with theories. The one has prepared for posterity an edition of one half of the Confederate movement, the other gives his views of the other half. The one addresses a bludgeon to the military student, the other to the student of constitutional law. Both address the student of history."

OUR YOUNG MEN.

The Gadsden Times chooses the above caption as the test for some admirable remarks which we can do no better than to reproduce for our readers:

"Old men for council, and young men for war," is a time honored adage with much of truth in it. Yet, as we are free to admit, as it is everywhere to be seen, that certain persons, ages, and conditions of life, are by nature better adapted to particular positions and trusts than others. A position to the contrary would be in direct opposition to the experience and observation of all. So varied, however, are life's obligations and pursuits that tribute may be laid upon all in their sphere without the least violence to established law. The aged, with their wisdom and experience, may contribute to the public store of good, while the young in their ardor and hope may labor for its preservation. In union there is strength—strength to defend the right and resist the wrong. All should feel the necessity of this harmony of action; without it no great good can be attained."

Each week and month and year mark changes in the leading men of our country. Death ever insatiable, with every lapsing period, carrying hence its full quota. How many within the last few days have passed from the stage? Soon all of those who were most active in our recent great sectional struggle will have passed away. The helm of public interest must be held by other hands. Since the hand of death is so unrelenting, the hand of the stranger and adventurer, or rather should it not be the hand of him born and bred on this friendly soil? Should not our young men be initiated into the spirit and tenor of our country, enter her service, with heart and hand both in rank and file, that she may be led no more fully to her destined end, and that the hand of death may be met with love of light and country, may, it seems to us, most appropriately serve at her altars."

Death of Gen. Johnston's nurse.

The following paragraph from the Knoxville Press and Herald is of local interest:

"On Monday last there died in this city an old and true friend of our country, who, when a young woman, lived in Abingdon, Va., and nursed the embryo hero, Joe Johnston, while the General was yet in his swaddling clothes. Judy was always proud of this eventful period of her life, and frequently spoke of 'Mas' Joe' in terms of approbation, as a 'blessed good ole and no mistake.' Judy's funeral was largely attended by the colored people of Knoxville, with whom she was a great favorite."

AN INVINCIBLE HAND.

How Five Jacks Happened to Beat Four Aces—The way they do it in the Creek Nation.

During the session of the U. S. District Grand Jury, a witness was called before them by the United States Attorney, a half breed Creek Indian and negro, bright, sharp and intelligent. He was the last witness to be called before adjournment that day. After his examination came one of the grand jurors and asked him a question. He was the man who had four aces beaten.

He answered, "Yes, sah I see de man."

"Will you have any objections to telling it?"

"I see alder it will git me into trouble; but it de Judge is willin'," appealing to the foreman, "I tell it."

The Judge consented, then Scipio proceeded:

"You see, I live on the cattle trail from Texas through the Creek country to Kansas, and I was out in the road one day, and I meets a gentleman named a big guy of cattle."

He says, 'Old man do you live in this country?'

I says, 'Yes sah.'

He says 'Is a mighty poor country. How do you make out?'

I says, 'Sah, it is a pretty good country. We has plenty of meat and bread, and I makes a good living a—'

He says, 'Old man do you ever play kerd?' I says, 'Yes, I does sometimes.'

He says, 'would you have any objections to play a little draw?'

I says, 'No, sah.'

So we gets of our horses along side de road, and get down, and I puts out de kerd. Well, in a short time I beat de gentleman out of sixty dollars and a half, and I thought I had him; so I put my hand upon him—for I is, do I say it myself, a mighty smart hand at kerd, and I know'd he would have tree jacks and I know'd he had tree aces, and in de draw I know'd he'd git de jack and I would git de ace. So he raises a bit, and I raises one back till at last I put up all de money I had winned from de gentleman and all de change I had and I know'd I had him. Well in de draw de gent got de ace and I got de ace. De gent wanted to bet, but I clinted a sight for de money, and told him I had an invincible hand that couldn't be beat.

He says, 'Old man, dem is right good tricks you is got on, how much did they cost you?'

I says, 'Yes, sah, dey cost me ten dollars.'

He says, 'I puts up ten dollars again on.'

He says, 'Berry well, sah, but I tells you I got a invincible hand.'

He puts up de money, and I holds up my legs and de jacks of de bristles and lays 'em down long side of him."

Now, sah, says I, 'I told you'

thought something was the matter with it. Now, if you have got any remarks to make about that butter, you can make 'em right here."

"I was simply examining the peculiar appearance of the oleaginous compound," replied the man at the table; and he spoke with exasperating coolness. "Those blue streaks impart to the article a variegated appearance which somewhat excited my curiosity. Blue streaks, I believe, are considered a novelty in butter; are they not?"

The restaurant-keeper was somewhat taken aback by the calm reply of the other, but he recovered himself sufficiently to remark:

"Blue streaks are always in good butter at this season of the year. You must be one of those d—d up-country lunatics not to know that."

The restaurant-keeper paused for a moment, and resumed in a three-sided voice:

"You must understand that I don't allow no man to come to this restaurant and go snuffin' around the butter no well-bred man would do it I'll tell you."

"I approximated that butter to my nose simply to ascertain if those blue streaks made an particular difference in the smell. I think that the streaks make no very remarkable difference in the smell; in fact, I am of the opinion that if any difference at all is occasioned, it is actually for the better. As far as smelling the butter is concerned, I hold that, having paid for the article, I have a perfect right to smell of it, and should do again if I thought it at all necessary; but I do not think so. I smelled that greasy substance in this instance merely to ascertain if it was the new article of commerce called oleomargarine. I have satisfied myself that it is oleomargarine, and having thus arrived at a satisfactory conclusion in regard to the matter, I shall have no occasion to smell of it again."

Here the frigid customer deposited a quarter on the table and turned to go.

Before he could reach the door, however, the restaurant-keeper, excited by an uncontrollable pitch of frenzy to the speaker's last remark yelled vociferously:

"It's an infernal lie! I keep none of your bull butter in this house. You lie if you say so, sir! I can lick him now!" and he smote his guest upon the nose.

In another instant the guest, fortified, doubtless, by his recent substantial meal, launched his right hand between the other's eyes and landed a blow that sent him reeling and stumbling out of the door.

There was a clatter of plates, a rattle of steel forks, and a dash of butter dishes accompanying the last maneuver, but still restaurant-keeper lay without apparent life or motion.

The guest surveyed him for a moment, and then, lifting the plate of butter for a fourth time to his nose, sniffed it deliberately, laid it down, and departed; remarking as he went out: "It is oleomargarine, and no mistake!"

Red River Raft.

It will require $10,000, per annum to keep Red River clear of the great raft recently removed above Shreveport. It formerly extended 35 miles, above Shreveport. Its removal exhausted an appropriation, made by Congress, of $250,000, but a good channel was opened all through, and boats have recently passed up and down without trouble. The work of removal occupied about two years. At first, gunpowder, dynamite and other explosives, were tried with poor results, but finally, nitro-glycerine was used and the work proceeded easily enough. Two steamers and five saw boats, the latter with steam saws, were also used, one of the boats, Aid, formerly a song-bait $20,000. An electric battery was used with the nitro, and no accident ever happened, as all the hands kept clear whenever there was an explosion; in fact, no one cared to fool with it.

Once, a two pound can of the stuff was put under a big log, and as man on the other end was about to jump into a skiff, it went off, sending log and man in the air. The man fell into thirty-five feet of water, touching the bottom, and came to the surface unhurt. About 2,000 pounds of nitro was used in the raft, at a cost of $2 per pound.

The strikers on the Erie Railroad stopped all trains at Susquehanna, Pa., on Saturday. In response to the call of the Sheriff the State troops have taken possession of the town. Two militia regiments in Philadelphia are under marching orders. It is announced that passenger trains were to run through last night.

SMELLING THE BUTTER.

Yesterday afternoon an athletic individual was noticed sliding along Montgomery street, with an anxious eye peering inquisitively into the window of every eat-house which he passed. He was evidently a man whose choice in gastronomical matters was governed solely by the quantity of meat, vegetables and liquids given in exchange for a stipulated sum. Finally he appeared to be satisfied with the inducements held out in long bill of fare which, tacked to a carcase of mutton in front of a window, fluttered in the breeze and informed the hunger-haunted passer, y that four dishes could be had within for 25 cents.

The man went in and in a few moments was tackling a slim meal with vigorous alacrity. After finishing his allotted four plates, with the exception of a few slices of bread, his eye fell upon a small plate of butter, which in his hurry he had evidently not noticed before. He was about to plunge his knife into the butter when something peculiar in its appearance caused him to pause, and while pausing he took occasion to reflect. Suddenly he reached forward and taking the small butter plate between his finger and thumb held it forward and examined its contents for nearly a minute. He next held it to his nose and sniffed its savor three successive times with a puzzled expression of countenance.

All this time the restaurant-keeper was standing immediately behind the butter analyzer, watching him attentively, and his face was indicative of rage and disgust.

"Perhaps you don't like that butter?" was his first remark, torrogatively.

The man at the table simply laid down the butter, and turned round with an inquiring expression on his visage but he said nothing.

"Perhaps you don't like that butter?" yelled the restaurant man in a somewhat savagely exclamatory tone.

"I don't know, as yet—the fact is, I haven't tried it."

"Well, you looked at it as if you
