ADDRESS

Delivered Before the Southern Historical Society, at Jacksonville, Ala.,

Wednesday Night, February 13th, 1874.

BY B. H. HILL.

[Published by the Society.]

Mr. President, the object of this meeting is to organize, in Georgia, an auxiliary branch of "The Southern Historical Society."

The object of this Society is to collect and preserve authentic materials for a correct history of the Confederate States. I have accepted the flattering invitation to address you on this occasional, and now proceed to perform the part allotted me, as both a duty and a pleasure.

When the war between secession and coercion ended, the Southern States were under every obligation to de-fectly and completely surrender to the abandon secession as a remedy for overthrowing the sword. Whatever might have been their convictions touching the abstract right of secession, or the insufficiency of the causes which provoked its exercise, surrender was a confession of nothing more. It was a confession of weakness

the possessor of a kind of negative political faith, a man whose only creed was, "I am not a Democrat." When No-notherism sprang up he ardently embraced it, and through it endeavored to embrace a seat in the Legislature, but fortunately for the country, the people of Calhoun could not see it.

Striking a rather confiding young man by the name of Burton, who had some $800, he induced him to put it in a No-nother paper here called the American Eagle, he contributing his scrupulous bias as consideration for a share in the partnership. The Republican wing of the neck of this ambitious bird of freedom in the short space of three months, and it slept with the fathers. The young man, who had become impoverished through his association with this "dead beat," went elsewhere, and so did he, having completely played himself out.

Gathering a smattering of law, he stuck out his shingle as a lawyer, but clients were shy and he never prospered. Shaking the dust of Alabama from his feet, we next hear of him in a village of Georgia, where he was engaged at pretty much everything, but never accomplished anything. Playing out, he departed from there, leaving a long list of mourning creditors behind, and again returned to Alabama.

The war coming on, found him a Union man. The pressure being too great, however, he worked himself up into a patriotic fit and essayed to play the soldier. It was merely play, for when war became reality and the blood of the best and the bravest flowed like water, when the gallant youth of the land were laying down their lives in the fields of the West and in the valleys of Virginia, when one whom he assails now was plodding along hungry, shoulder weary with weight of a musket, and hip raw with the weight of a cartridge box, under the leadership of the peerless, the immortal Lee, his coward heart failed him, and with blanched cheek he fled to the se-

The war over his footsteps again led him to Jacksonville with a big college scheme in his head, but having once enjoyed the luxury of his presence, the people of this place didn't invest anything in Borden stock.

Going to our pleasant and prosperous neighbor, Oxford, where he was not so well known, he succeeded in inducing our energetic new school to build a college for him, and in this town there were many who were known to stick at any one thing, he threw it up and left its management in worthier hands. Meanwhile he journeyed to the Montgomery Convention in search of the office of Supt. of Public Instruction, but there his services were not appreciated and he did not even succeed in getting his name before the Convention.

He was a man of great ability and assuming control of a school, held many famous reports—true to his barefaced of time to be open Democratic party—turned it into a no-keepers journal and the special organ of all the cranky notions that entered his cranky brain, carefully excluding from its columns anything that might offend. Together with that of editor, he united the duties of the Real Estate Agent (having "beat" the County Treasurer out of a license) Lawyer and Life Insurance Agent and General Supervisor of Everybody's Business but his own. While in this position of editor he decided in involving the proprietor in liabilities, which that gentleman had had to pay. Despite the "dead beat" has absorbed all the profits.

The two keepers fever over, he slunk round generally without attracting especial attention, until the idea flashed into his shallow brain that he might gain some no trophy by attacking himself men throughout the county. Obtaining the assistance of two well known backsliders, masked beyond the possibility of detection, he set out on his

SOUP GRAPES.—We don't want office. — Borden.

An unusual scene took place yesterday at "Square Parker's" office. It was nothing more nor less than the marriage of George Taylor, a colored man, to Rebecca Fraser, a white woman. After the ceremony was performed they embraced in the presence of the crowd, and then started down Perry street loaded arms, feeling as happy as the birds of the air. This is a practical illustration of "no distinction on account of race, color or previous condition."—Montgomery State Journal, (Rand.)
