THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

Whilst the political adventure and revolutionists, ever ready for plots and juggles and ever expectant of sensations, are waiting for General Grant to make some signal indicating his readiness to enter into their schemes, the stolid Democrats and the solid Republicans calmly take their way along the beaten tracks, sure that the next Presidential contest will lie between the two old regular parties, led by two old veteran participants. It may be on the one hand Thurman or Hendricks or Bayard, and on the other hand Morton or Blaine or Washburn or Conkling, but it is bound to be the Democratic party against the Republican party. Extremes are not to meet in the persons of Butler and Stephens, managing a league in the interest of Grant.
Butler is to be shelved in Massachusetts. Stephens is to retire to the seclusion of Liberty Hall.
Grant is to walk out of the White House, carrying all his baggage along with him, unassisted by a stretchers. There is to be no pitfall, no sudden trap-door, no ambush, no bloody-minded fool's contrivance anywhere. The healthy-minded and cheerful bigots of each particular element are equally confident of success. They at least are not going to see anything astounding or novel. It is not a period of disorganization.
The transition epoch has passed away, leaving by gone organisms just as they used to be. Last year Republican, rid of Grant, will be folded into the old embrace. The discontented Democrats, quit of Liberalism, will resume the half-abandoned tenets of the true faith.
For the presumptions journalists, they will have leave to go to the devil, where they properly belong, and so—

"The world will wag its ancient way, Just as it did before it went away."

Undoubtedly, this is a fair prospect, and nobody can complain of it, except the mountebanks and charlatans, in looking out for bustle, and only looking out for themselves. If another century of Republican government be intended for us, it can have no better end-of than such a placement of parties two years hence.
To recover the lost balance of sections and parties to pick up the lost threads of liberty and law; to fall into the straight and narrow path which leads round and round the altar on which the Constitution, fenced in by its old guarantees, rests in safety; to establish mutual respect, if not a reciprocated affection, among the people; to make the Union whole again, centrally as well as physically, is certainly a good work for the statesmen of the two opposing factions. But it is a hard work.

Each of the two parties has its tradition—each its prejudices.
They have hitherto mutually driven one another away from national meetings. If they should revise their lines of latitude as to believe a race after a genuine, outstanding nationality, suited to our patriotic revival, and through this of a perpetuation of the old, which spirit would be more to oppose than it is. Otherwise the nationalistic agencies will come in, and there are unselfish, "aiding and powerful interest, they offer preliminary to political agitation. In this way the common cause of the dead-levellers may after all prove to be illusory.

In any event, however, the Republican leaders in Congress can do nothing by liberalizing. They should try to build up a sentiment of the South, instead of establishing a department. They should show the nature and fitness of things, not the bunglers and heats which they have trusted and supported, without reference to the efficiency. Above all, they should discourage at home, in the North, the senseless clamor against the Southern people, which would be childish if it were not seriously hurtful. The war is over. Its results should go no further.

The case against the South has been finally disposed of, the South accepts the verdict, and no good can come of any further reference to it.

No greater mistake can be committed than that of supposing the South powerless. It is powerful for good or harm—for good, if the Government settles down into its old grooves—for harm, if it does not. Perhaps the devices and desires attributed to General Grant are merely the fancies of morbid imaginative minds. But, be they of no other birth, it can do no harm to give them the room we give to toys. A single year before our great civil war the common sense of the country scouted every serious prediction touching its possibility. When Macaulay wrote the singularly prophetic letter to Bismarck, he ridiculed it.
Even after the inauguration of Lincoln the average mind of the country could not conceive the situation, and went on hoping against hope.

We really want—the people North and South, want—to do the fair, honest thing by one another.
This can only be done by an abandonment of the interference policy, leaving the Southern States to take care of their local interests, like the Northern States. The present policy of the Republican party exposes it to constant temptations, as it exposes the South to constant injustices. It also gives rise to ill-breeding criminalities and recriminations, which stand in the way of sectional good will. It is, thus, as we conceive, an unpatriotic policy, and if it is not abated, it may lead to a collision between Grant and the Democrats, by which the President will be continued in office and the Democrats be re-established in power, at the cost of a great cardinal principle in their faith.

The Republican leaders are too intelligent to need to be told that these are the merest conjectures; but they are also too acute not to recognize them as possibilities.
The time has come for them to take about and fall into the line marked out for them by Morton in 1866. That line was untenable because of the bungling, vacillation and bad faith of Andrew Johnson. It is perfectly tenable now. Nothing can be more ruinous to the Republican party, as nothing can be more false to the national predilections and characteristics of many of its best minds than that it should continue to pursue the wretched woods-path which it has pursued the last six years. It will lead only deeper and deeper into the bushes and briers. There are indeed no am-bushes on the open political highway. It is the other route, promising nothing at the start, and leading nowhere, which is full of them. The Republican party should abandon it at once, put itself on high national ground, and command the respect, if not the affection, of the Southern people by its candor, moderation and justice.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Prospectus for 1874.—Seventh Year
THE ALDINE

An Illustrated Monthly Journal, Universally admitted to be the most valuable in the world. A Representative and Champion of American Taste.

Not for Sale in Book or News Stores.

The Aldine, while issued with all the regularity has none of the temporary or timely interest characteristic of ordinary periodicals. It is an elegant miscellany of pure, light and graceful literature; and a selection of pictures, the rarest specimens of artistic skill, in black and white. Although succeeding number affords a fresh picture to its friends, the value and beauty of the Aldine will be most appreciated after it has been bound up at the close of the year. The Aldine is a unique and original conception—rare and unapproached—already without competition in price and character. The possession of a complete volume cannot duplicate the quantity of fine paper and engravings for any other shop or number of volumes for the same time its cost; and then, there are the chromes, besides!

Art Department, 1874.

The Aldine is a new and beautiful chromotype of Europe. It is an admitted fact that the wood cut is the best of the old, and the perfection over obtained. The common prejudice in favor of "steel plate," is rapidly yielding to a new and beautiful chromotype, which recognizes the advantage of superior artistic quality with greater facility of production.
